HIGH AIM OF THIEVES

ROYAL CROWNS HAVE BEEN OB-JECTS OF DEPREDATIONS.

Latest to Be Recorded is an Attempt to Purloin the Now Disused Diadem That Once Belonged to Brazil's Ruler.

Recently the imperial crown of Brazil was stolen from the Chateau d'Eu, in Normandy, only a few miles from Dieppe. Already on June 12, three of the largest diamonds of the crown were found to have been pried out and to have disappeared, along with three costly rings belonging to the Countess d'Eu. The services of the police and of private detective agencies had been called into action by the royal occupants of the chateau, but without avail.

Attention has thus been drawn to child of the late Dom Pedro, Brazil's last emperor, who was dethroned in 1889. Sixty-six years old, very tall and im posing, with large, bright eyes and most unaffected in manner, the excrown princess has inherited much of her father's looks and character. Like him, she lives a life of mingled stateliness and simplicity. Born at Rio de Janeiro and married there in 1864 to Prince Gaston, son of the late Duc de Nemours and grandson of King Louis Philippe of France, she repeatedly acted as regent of Brazil during her father's absence in Europe and the United States, and it was as such that it fell to her lot to sign the decree abolishing for all time negro slavery in his dominions. Decay of Handwriting. The decay of handwriting was the subject of a plaint by a correspondent recently in the London Times. "The steel pen." he wrote, "was one factor in altering the style and legibility of writing, and the fountain pen, in some of its varieties, has proved to be a still more harmful machine. Typing certainly secures legibility, but that is not writing, and it is doing much to discourage the practice of caligraphy. "There is good reason to believe that neat writing is neither taught nor even encouraged in our great secondary schools. Schoolmasters appear to accept any kind of bad writing. The average boy or girl now takes little or no pains to form letters. In other words, they do not write at all. parents or teachers appear to take any notice of this writing, and the letters of the last century, which were generally neat and legible, at the hands of both sexes, certainly put us to shame today." This "laudator temporis acti" concluded by a curious prediction that posterity will have some severe comments to make on the handwriting of the twentieth century.

a report on the mining and water supply of the Fortymile, Seventymile, Circie and Fairbanks districts, Alaska. by E. A. Porter and C. E. Elleworth. The estimated value of the combined gold production of the Fortymile and Seventymile districts for 1911 was $212,000, an increase of $12,000 over the output for 1910 due to the success of two dredges on the headwaters of Fortymile river. The value of the gold production of the Fairbanks district in 1911 is estimated to be approximately $4,500,000, a decrease of $1,-690,000 from the output for 1910, due mainly to the fact that most of the benanzas of the camp have been worked out and the major part of the mining was confined to deposits of relatively low grade, The Circle precinct in 1911 produced gold with an estimated value of $350,000, which exceeds that of any other year since 1898. Tho increase was due entirely to the improved methods employed.
